

Not Your Usual Brown Bag Affair

Oct. 16, 2006

Associate Justice Anthony M. Kennedy of the Supreme Court of the United States visited the James R. Browning U.S. Courthouse in San Francisco Monday for a “brown bag” discussion with judges, law clerks and clerk’s staff of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. The visit also coincided with the unveiling of Justice Kennedy’s official portrait, which will soon occupy a prominent place in the courthouse. In an hour-long chat, Justice Kennedy touched on a variety of topics and took questions, above. Participating Ninth Circuit judges included, from left, Stephen Trott, Richard C. Tallman, J. Clifford Wallace and Diarmuid F. O’Scainnlain. The courthouse visit followed Justice Kennedy’s participation Saturday in a Stanford University homecoming program on world affairs. He will be in San Diego Thursday for an award presentation honoring Judge Wallace.
